In Association With

The Association of Solicitors in Omagh and its surrounding District was born from the Tyrone Solicitors' Association which when formed in 1909 had, at its heart, the wish to regulate and support the legal practitioners in Omagh at that time. In 1909, being one of the first associations in the province, it spanned and included the entire County of Tyrone, but as the number of qualified lawyers increased through the years, some formed their own associations in other towns in the county. However Omagh remains the hub of the West and has a vibrant and lively association which provides a forum for issues that affect the profession and most importantly, its clients.

The members of the Association meet on a monthly basis with the object of achieving a consensus for the delivery of improved professional services to their clients. Having celebrated its centenary two years ago, the association is proud to assert that the ethical and professional standards which existed at its formation are still a core influence on the members of the Association today. Life can be difficult and sometimes there is need to resort to professional help in resolving issues, but the members of the Omagh & District Solicitors' Association, with their long tradition of integrity and service are always available to help when called upon.
